

AN ELEPHANT'S STORY

On a starry night in the wilderness of Botswana, in her 661st day of pregnancy, an elephant named Kiti gave birth to a baby girl. The staff of Abu Camp, a halfway house for orphaned and former zoo and circus elephants, named the calf Naledi, the word for “star” in their local language.

Caretakers, including elephant manager Wellington (“Wellie”) Jana and wildlife biologist and Botswana native Dr. Mike Chase, were pleased by Naledi’s acceptance into the herd and the care she was receiving from her mother. But six weeks after giving birth, Kiti died and Naledi was left an orphan. How the dedicated caretakers rallied to adopt the baby elephant, save her life, and reintroduce her to the herd that had forgotten her is the story told in Naledi: One Little Elephant, A Nature Special Presentation.

Although elephant families are close, it is extremely precarious for a newborn to survive once it’s lost its mother. When the herd’s matriarch can’t produce enough milk to nurse Naledi and doesn’t know how to care for her, Chase, Wellie, and others separate Naledi from the herd and relocate her to another part of the camp, working round the clock to establish a bond and entice her to take milk. The filmmakers also document the cautious reintroduction of Naledi to the rest of the family, as well as surgery to repair her digestive track, which has become blocked due to palm leaves she has eaten.

“The challenges elephants face across Africa are so complex: loss of habitat, increasing human-elephant conflict, retaliatory killings exacerbated by the demand for ivory,” he says. “We’re losing elephants every 15 minutes, 96 elephants a day. We may be losing between 25,000 and 30,000 annually.”

Despite these daunting statistics, Chase finds inspiration in Naledi’s story. “Naledi’s journey is emblematic of the journey we are embarking on to save her wild cousins,” he says. “I’ve devoted my life to conserving these majestic creatures.”

AMERICAN GRADUATE DAY 2017

Since 2012, the American Graduate Day broadcast has focused on telling stories, creating resources and building community connections to successfully move students from early education through high school graduation. With the graduation rate now at an all-time high, American Graduate Day is expanding the conversation and stories beyond the high school diploma, highlighting workforce trends, career pathways and job opportunities, and the necessary skills to meet industry needs in every community across America.

Back for a sixth year and hosted by Soledad O’Brien, American Graduate Day will feature General and Mrs. Colin Powell, John Legend, Misty Copeland, Phil Mickelson, Bill Moyers, Daymond John, Juju Chang, Jane Pauley, Marcus Samuelsson and more. At right, Sheba Turk interviewed Jazz at Lincoln Center’s Vincent Gardner and Devante Dunbar during the 2016 broadcast.

COURTESY OF LOOKOUT POINT AND MASTERPIECE

The intrepid eighteenth-century duo of Captain Ross Poldark and his fiery partner Demelza promises thrilling exploits in Poldark's new season. Dressing up was never so dazzling — or dangerous — in The Collection, as a family struggles to buy a fashion empire at any cost in Paris post-World War II. The adventures of Louisa Durrell and her four willful children continue in a second season of The Durrells in Corfu.

Treasures of New York takes viewers behind the curtain of a vibrant theatre and beloved community institution on Staten Island. Starting in the golden age of vaudeville, the film follows the St. George Theatre's story of survival and transformation through decades of disrepair — until a local dance teacher and her daughters step in to rescue the theatre and turn it into the thriving live performance venue it is today.
